One day he said he would treat his friends with an account of his adventures in the island of Rhodes. He described to them the Colossus oi Rhodes, one of the seven wonders of the world, that had its two feet on the two moles of the harbour, so that ships in full sail could pass between its legs; it had a winding stair-case within, by which you could climb up to the chamber of the head, and look out at the windows of the eyes; and few men were so tall, that they could make their two arms meet round the thickness of its thumb. I do not know that the traveller told any fibs about the Colossus; it was not easysto make it in description more extraordinary than it was in reality. . The traveller observed that the Rhodians particularly excelled in leaping: no natiop in the woxild could leap like them. There were twopersons principally in Rhodes, when he came, that could beat the rest: but he (letermined to try; and in his first attempt he found he could outleap the In both. I believe he said that he had leaped forty yards on level ground. A grave old gentlenan who was sitting by, turned up his nose with a sneer, and said, Now 1 like this story better than any that you have told us before. You must know that there are some young fellows in our town, who are...
