Not illustrated. 1904 Excerpt: .of the cliffs getting their water from the tanks above, which filters through the sandstone. The water in the cisterns is clear, but is undrinkable being defiled by bat dung. The large baoris or wells furnish the only really good and permanent supply of water. The main or east cliff entrance to Gwalior passes through the beautiful Hindu palace of Man Singh, that juts out picturesquely from the rock scarp, which it crowns. The Raja gave it the name of painted palace, for in his time it was lavishly decorated with coloured glazed tiles, remnants of which stand out in fine relief to-day against the pale sandstone of the building. There are two visible stories on the east side and two underground, of which latter bats form the chief tenants. The facade is three hundred feet long and one hundred high. It is broken in places by solid round towers crowned by domed cupolas. These cupolas are the least interesting feature of the walls and pass almost unnoticed, when one contemplates the exquisite battlements of latticed stonework, which connect them. The domes were formerly covered with plates of gilded copper, and the effect of these surmounting the white chunam covered walls banded with brilliant tiles must have been striking. Only a few traces of chunam remain, and the pale sandstone structure seen to-day is delightfully harmonious as well as impressive. Even now it is worth climbing the hill to see a huge elephant in his trappings...
